Increasing the minimum wage is one way to begin to cut into the wealth and power of the 1 percent and create a fairer America.

The proposed increase of the NYS Minimum Wage to $8.50 will do next to nothing, however, to cut into the wealth and power of the 1 percent.

Only a determined campaign to raise the NYS Minimum Wage to a Living Wage ($12.78), as TCWC proposes, will do that.

Such a campaign, if pursued by TCWC in a militant way, also has the potential to link up with and re-energize the Occupy Movement.

If you look around Tompkins County and elsewhere, the vast majority of people earning less than $12.78 are employed by 1 percenters like Wal-Mart, McDonald’s, Holiday Inn, and many others. And most of these people are adult men and women trying to support a family.

In the competitive environment where these service sector 1 percenters operate, there is no way that they can raise prices to offset the wage increase enough to maintain the stream of money going into their pockets.

As a result, raising the minimum wage ($7.25) to a living wage ($12.78) will produce a direct transfer of money from the pockets of the 1 percent to the pockets of the 99 percent, mostly to those who are the poorest of the 99 percent. It will reduce the rate of exploitation in our society and be a significant step toward a fairer society.

By increasing the purchasing power of thousands of low-wage working families, it will also pump much-needed spending into Tompkins and other counties, creating a substantial number of new Living Wage jobs.

We can argue, as I have done in the past, that a rise of the minimum wage to $8.50 at least is something, and at least it is doable. But make no mistake, this not only has little effect on the 1 percent, it also undermines much of our efforts to create a living wage community and society.

It undermines us because it gives low-wage employers unfair competitive advantage over anybody who considers paying a Living Wage to their employees and makes it less likely that...
Member Spotlight: Becky Bowen

by Linda Holzbaur

If you’ve ever volunteered, you know that there are some people you can always rely on. The Workers’ Center is lucky to know several people like that, including Becky Bowen. Becky first became involved at the Workers’ Center when she was a freshman at Ithaca College, attending a series of workshops called Organizing School. The Organizing School tried to find ways that communities can resolve social issues from the ground up. It didn’t take long for Becky to go from participant to workshop facilitator.

Becky says ‘Getting to know people at the WC was, and is, a great way to get to know others in the community. Especially as a college student, it would’ve been easy to pass on through in four years without knowing anything about the place where I was living. Instead, I found an amazing organization that helps people stand up for their rights and get the fair treatment that everyone deserves. Though there are hundreds of nonprofits in the area, TCWC gets at the core of the challenges facing Tompkins County residents.’

Although Becky thinks that Living Wage Certification and the Workers’ Hotline are great campaigns, it is the Community Union Organizers (CUO) group that she feels most drawn to because it works to organize the whole community, not just one sector of the workforce. ‘Friends from out of town always remark at how lucky our community is to have these resources available. It’s an obvious need everywhere but here at TCWC, we’re actually doing it!’ she says.

Currently the outreach coordinator at the Community Science Institute, a certified nonprofit water testing lab that monitors local stream quality and educates about issues relating to water quality, Becky has also worked part-time at Ithaca Carshare and in a variety of delivery driving, wait-staffing jobs. Becky was inspired to join the CUOs by Diana Ceja, another delivery driver, who always feels the need to stand up for what is right.

Becky grew up in a town in rural, central Pennsylvania, Lewisburg, where she has ‘a wonderful supportive family of two parents, two sisters and a brother.’ She is engaged to her longtime partner (and TCWC member) Zac Sims; they are living in and fixing up a log cabin out in the forest in one of the more remote areas of the county.

And of course, because she’s full of energy and ideas, Becky is busy with many other things. Besides her TCWC involvement, she’s on the Board of the Finger Lakes Permaculture Institute. She plays guitar and violin, loves being outdoors doing things connected to the earth like growing and canning food, does yoga and plays with her Himalayan cats.

Thank you, Becky, for your exuberance, your thoughtful ness and your dedication to helping others.

New Occupational Health Resource for Southern Tier Workers

We are happy to announce the Grand Opening of The Occupational Health Clinical Center’s new Binghamton office. OHCC, a worker-focused, publicly funded medical practice that offers accurate diagnosis of work-related illness in current and former workers, is a great resource for workers who have been injured or made ill on the job.

OHCC is a tremendous advocate for worker health and safety as well as worker’s rights. We are lucky to have this unique clinic nearby.

The Grand Opening will be on Friday, May 18, at 840 (Upper) Front Street/US Route 11 (near Broome County Community College). Located in the same building as Cornell Cooperative Extension of Broome County, parking and clinic entrance are located behind the building. Everyone is welcomed.

Tompkins County Workers' Center Plays a Significant Role in Creating an Upstate New York Workers' Center Movement

by Pete Meyers

The past year has been a particularly rewarding one for the Tompkins County Workers' Center in the sense that we are actively helping to create a Regional Upstate New York Workers' Center Network. Our intention to create such a Network took a serious uptick in the past year, having received a $10K grant from Interfaith Worker Justice to mentor, stimulate, and deepen the regional connections between worker justice efforts upstate.

The Tompkins County Workers’ Center is the longest standing Workers’ Center in upstate New York. The Workers’ Center of Central New York (http://workerscentercny.org), located in Syracuse, started about four years ago, and they are making incredible efforts at becoming sustainable in Onondaga and surrounding counties. Our two Centers have worked closely together for the past several years and have had conversations about merging our work together more intentionally.

Other efforts in upstate include Workers’ Center start-ups beginning in Rochester, Buffalo, Albany, Binghamton, Cortland, and Utica. Each effort is at varying levels of development. It is true and clear that for workers to develop more power, we must develop and deepen our connections and abilities to empower and organize workers on a larger regional basis in such a way that is mutually reciprocal.

Some of the benefits of regionalizing our work include the following possibilities:

- the potential to field calls to a central Workers’ Rights Hotline that would be shared by the various locales who are part of the regional network;
- sharing our resources and experiences with each other in such a way that helps to expand our knowledge base;
- being able to mobilize collectively to bring more power to bear on any specific Workers’ Center’s campaign;
- the possibility of joining forces to help bring statewide changes.

If you live in another part of the State of New York and would like to either start your own Workers’ Center or plug in to one of the already-existing efforts, please give our office a call at 607-269-0409 or send us an email at TCWRH@tcworkerscenter.org

A Living Wage: The Only Way Forward

they will do so.

In conclusion it is worth remembering that, as inequality researcher Chuck Collins says, “We are living in an inequality death spiral. These growing inequalities of wealth, power and opportunity interact in a frighteningly dynamic way to contribute to a downward spiral of worsening social, ecological and economic conditions.”

Income redistribution is the best and most direct way to deal with that inequality death spiral but it won’t come from increasing the minimum wage to $8.50. It just might come by linking with Occupy and building a movement committed to making the minimum wage a Living Wage.

May Day Activities in Tompkins County

The arc of the moral universe is long but it bends toward justice

Bending the arc of the universe: JUSTICE or JUST US(?)

*From our allies at Occupy Ithaca and Occupy Cornell:
What do racial justice, worker justice, and education justice look like? What are we going to do about it?*

In solidarity with the May 1st global strike, Occupy Ithaca and Occupy Cornell call for a People’s School on the Commons.

Join together for a May Day People’s Gathering on the Ithaca Commons on May 1st from 10:30AM to 4 PM.

May Day is a day to confront widespread racial discrimination, declining wages and insecure contracts for workers, the exploitation of undocumented workers, rising debts for students, ever mounting stresses for working parents, and crippling income and wealth inequality.

May Day is a day to organize and educate around justice—for students, for families, for workers, for the marginalized.

At the People’s School we will explore together ways to build justice in our workplaces, in our schools, and on our streets.

The People’s School will be organized based on an effective, directly democratic method that enables groups of people who are passionate about an issue to organize themselves and choose the most effective way to use their time. Everyone’s participation is encouraged, everyone’s input is valued.

May Day is a day for exercising our right to peaceably assemble, and we are not requesting a permit in order to do so.

Cost: Free to the people!
Lunch will be provided at noon by Food Not Bombs Ithaca.

6:30PM: Join us for the Occupy Ithaca General Assembly.

Those interested in moving from discussing injustice to direct action for justice will assemble at the Bernie Milton Pavilion. Together, we will decide upon a particular direct action based on the passions, know-how, and comfort levels of all participants.

Once we have come to consensus on a direct action, we will act.

More information on Open Space Technology, the method we’ll be using to organize the event, can be found at: www.openspaceworld.org and www.chriscorrigan.com/openspace/whatisos.html

The Workers’ Center and the Labor-Religion Coalition of the Finger Lakes will also participate in the May Day People’s School. Watch our website and Facebook page for updates on schedules and activities.
