The Tompkins County Workers’ Center (TCWC) has been asked by some of our local supporters how it fosters sustainability and how it can play a larger role. Too often sustainability is limited to the natural environment. But sustainability involves more than that. The concept of the Three Pillars of Sustainability defines sustainability as taking into account three broad areas: 1) the economic; 2) the social; and 3) the environmental.

The TCWC mission seeks to enable economic and social sustainability. Workplaces where the employees are unfairly compensated or mistreated undermines both economic and social sustainability. Workers’ Center staff and volunteers experience this daily in the calls that come in to the Worker’s Rights Hotline. Callers describe work situations that tear at the fabric of their individual lives and the collective life in our community.

By championing a living wage and certifying employers who pay a living wage, the TCWC has contributed to economic and social sustainability locally. Low-wage workers, contingent workers, more-than-one job workers often live day-to-day. Because they do not have the security a living wage job provides, they are likely to pay little attention to "environmentalism" or develop concern about the environment as a long-term issue. Henry Ford’s decision to pay his workers enough to buy the car they made enabled decades of economic and social sustainability, though the product being manufactured violated the standard of environmental sustainability. A truly sustainable economy would foster the health of workers and their communities though fair wages and safe working conditions, and it would foster the health of the natural environment through the resources it used and how it used them.

The false choice of "saving the environment" at the expense of people's livelihoods often put workers and communities at odds with the environmental movement. However, sustainability, when rightly understood, can decouple the needs of the environment from the fear of job loss, even among vulnerable workers. The issue is no longer jobs or the environment. Rather, it is imagining and creating new ways for people to live and to work that are built on the Three Pillars of Sustainability: the economic, the social, and the environmental.

Some questions the TCWC is engaged in can help advance the conversation on sustainability and broaden it to include low-wage and other vulnerable workers in making it a reality.

• How can we work with labor unions to create green jobs that work towards greater sustainability: environmental, social, and economic?

• How can we involve those who have historically been at odds with, or alienated from, the environmental movement to look anew...

At the beginning of 2014 there was an increase in the minimum wage in New York State. It rose from $7.25 to $8.00 an hour. [The NYS Minimum Wage will be going up to $8.75/hour on 12/31/14.] Although the gains were small obviously this is something all workers can cheer. While those who work in retail and other low wage jobs saw their pay increase, tipped workers did not. In a town like Ithaca where so many are employed in the service industry the low minimum wage for tipped workers has a broad impact. For food service workers it is $5.00, for service employees, such as delivery drivers, it is $5.65 and for employees of resort hotels it is $4.90 if they also average at least $4.50 in tips.

They visited several cities and on October 3rd they came to Syracuse. Workers from Tompkins County and representatives from the Worker's Center participated in the event, including myself as a delivery driver for a local pizzeria.

This issue is close to my heart because I am a tipped worker and I make less than $8.00 an hour. One of the biggest problems with relying on tips is that the figure varies greatly from shift to shift. The amount I make in tips can be anywhere from a few dollars (literally) to more like $50-75. Clearly the most lucrative shifts are sought after so most of the time what I make is at the lower end.

In order to change the outlook for me and for all the people who will be doing these jobs well in to the future it is vital that New York State make moves to support tipped workers and truly create wealth that will ripple out through the local communities in to every corner of the state. Other states and cities that have raised the minimum wage have seen this far reaching effect and contrary to what opponents of raising the minimum wage to a living wage claim, the benefits have been clear. This isn’t even experimental at this stage. It’s just plainly good economic sense to put money in to the hands of the people who are working hard and will be spending it all over their communities to get the goods and services they need. There are few other single legislative acts that would positively affect so many citizens and by extension the economy of the entire state.
A Plea from Adjunct Professors at TC3 for Their Union to Be 'Voluntarily Recognized'

by Sherry Tacktill

Editor's Note: Although adjuncts teach the majority of the courses at Tompkins Cortland Community College (TC3), for years they have been the only group of college employees without a union and therefore the only employees without any voice over their wages, benefits, or working conditions. That's changing. Since September, TC3 adjuncts have been organizing a union -- the TC3 Adjunct Association (TC3AA), an affiliate of NY State United Teachers. Last month, TC3 Administration was informed that a majority of adjuncts had signed "authorization forms" expressing their desire for union representation. According to state labor laws, the College has until November 21st to "voluntarily recognize" the union, however there is strong concern among union activists that the College plans to try and derail the adjunct union by engaging in a protracted legal battle at the Public Employment Relations Board (PERB).

They have good reason for concern. Last spring, Cayuga Community College (near Syracuse) refused to voluntarily recognize their adjuncts' union, instead insisting that adjuncts needed to be absorbed by the existing union for fulltime faculty, a scenario which neither fulltime nor adjunct faculty want. The PERB hearing on that matter is set to finish in mid December and the judge's ruling isn't expected until late spring -- more than a year after Cayuga adjuncts first formed their union. Worse, regardless of how the judge rules, appeals and more delays are expected and it could be years until contract negotiations begin. In an effort to avoid a similar legal morass, adjuncts at TC3 are pressuring the College to take the high moral ground and not waste taxpayer monies on legal delays. What follows is one TC3AA Organizing Committee member's appeal to the Board of Trustees.

What follows (opposite) is an open letter to the board of trustees asking for that recognition.

• How do we reach working class communities in order to change widespread perceptions about the affordability and accessibility of green choices and lifestyles?

• How can we more deeply collaborate with and support those who are already doing this important work?

We invite our readers to consider one or more of these questions and share their thoughts on concrete ways to effect change that encompasses the three pillars of sustainability. We are taking the challenge seriously.

Put your thoughts into words and send them to us either via email at TCWRH@tcworkerscenter.org or postal mail at: 115 E. MLK Street, 14850. We will reprint some of the responses we receive in a future issue of The Worker's Edge.
Members of the Board of Trustees,

My name is Sherry Tacktill and I have been your employee for 8 years. During these eight years I have taught 47 classes over 22 semesters. I am here this evening to request that you respect the wishes of the majority of your part-time teaching staff for voluntary recognition of our union.

You may be wondering why your part-time staff feels the need to seek union representation. I will be happy to shed some light on this for you.

Your part-time faculty, much like your full-time faculty is comprised of competent teachers, dedicated mentors and sometimes surrogate parents to our TC3 students. We instruct classes, counsel students on a number of academic and personal issues, tutor students outside of class when they are in need of extra help, write letters of recommendation for college admission and employment applications, make referrals to mental health professionals when they are struggling and even drive them to and sit in hospitals when they are sick.

We are seen by our students as their teachers... not their part-time, contingent, or adjunct teachers, but their teachers. They trust that we are committed to their education and their futures. They trust that we know our subjects and are capable of providing meaningful and rigorous courses that will serve as keys to careers or the foundation for future study.

And yet, despite the fact that your part-time teachers make up 70% of your faculty and teach 56% of your college's classes... when we are on campus.

*There may not be a place for us to sit and work

*There may not be a computer for us to use.

*There may not be a private place for us to have a confidential conversation with a student.

We are hired as contingent teachers, but contingent on what? On need? Obviously there is a need for more than 10 full-time English instructors. We know this because since I have been here, the college has consistently employed between 30 and 50 part-time English instructors each semester. We all know that it takes years to have good teaching skills that result in a more stable educational environment, and yet due to the limit on the number of credits we are allowed to teach, the inconsistency in the number of classes we can depend on each semester, the salaries that we receive, and the fact that we no longer receive health benefits, we have seen instructors come and go when jobs with better futures present themselves. This is not good for TC3 students and not good for TC3’s reputation.

We are your backbone; we deserve to be recognized and respected. We ask for voluntary recognition of our union so that we may bargain, in good faith, for what will only improve TC3.

Thank you.

Tompkins Cortland Community College (TC3) Adjuncts Association Organizing Committee Members (L-R), Sherry Tacktill, Gregg Weatherby, Nancy Crane, and Cynthia Coleman plus Theresa Alt from the Tompkins County Workers' Center, gather outside the Old Courthouse after they addressed Tompkins County Legislators on October 22nd about the plight of adjunct professors at TC3.
